Text lightly tanned, else quite clean. Very Good.

Benecke was President of the Chariton County Board of Immigration. His handbook, issued for German immigrants, of whom Missouri had many, describes the advantages of Chariton County. The County was settled in the 1820's and 1830's by pioneers from the Upper South--particularly Kentucky and Tennessee. They brought their slaves with them; the area of Missouri in which they settled became known as Little Dixie. The German migration to Missouri before the Civil War was primarily to St. Louis and environs, which became an anti-slavery stronghold. With the death of slavery, Chariton County, like many places in the New South, sought to revitalize its institutions with immigrants, industry, and development. This rare broadside contains words to three hymns: "Kommen zu Jesu" [five stanzas with a varying chorus]; "Auf Zions Berg" [three stanzas with a chorus to be repeated]; "Das Schiff der Gnade" [four stanzas with a chorus to be repeated].

Berger Kirche was St. Joseph's Church in Pike Township, Berks County, Pennsylvania. It was established in the 1740s. St. Joseph's was used by German Lutheran and German Reformed congregations; it was better known as Hill Church, or Berger Kirch [Berger coming from 'berg', the German word for 'hill']. The church was located in the eastern part of Pike Township on fifty acres of land claimed by Casper Grygler, George Ernest and Andrew Rodenheffer around 1740 for the purpose of building a school and church. An anti-slavery pamphlet in German, likely addressed to naturalized recently-arrived Germans. Nabob the slave-owner informs his friend "Gottlieb" (who quotes often from Bible precedent against slavery) that he is on his way to sell fifty slaves--menfolk, womenfolk, boys and girls ("Mannsleute, Weibslleute, Buben und Maedchen")--who are all in tears; Gottlieb argues with him at length, concluding that the entire nation bears responsibility for electing pro-slavery Representatives. Nabob concludes that indeed the slaveholders will face the judgment of God. The text refers to the English emancipation in the West Indies, to the six to nine month residency requirements under slave transit laws (likely putting this somewhere in the 1840s), and to failed attempts to fund education for the poor in Ohio.
